

Pfeiffer Vacuum Technology Case Study

The Broadridge International Shareholder Communications Programme

For more than 100 years Pfeiffer's products have been setting milestones in vacuum technology. It has a comprehensive line of products and services which range from individual components through to complex vacuum systems.

Quality products and worldwide service play a decisive role in Pfeiffer's work. With the invention of the turbo molecular pump, the company has set a new standard in vacuum engineering and has become the world market leader in this field.

Pfeiffer Vacuum is listed on the Deutsche Boerse, Frankfurt - Prime Standard and TecDAX. Approximately 70 percent of its shareholder base is made-up of non-resident shareholders.

Aims & challenges

"Pfeiffer is one of the most profitable machinery companies in Germany. It aims to keep profits up in order to safeguard the jobs of its employees, satisfy the needs of its customers and meet its shareholders' expectations of a high dividend payout ratio and share price", said Gudrun Geissler, Investor Relations, Pfeiffer Vacuum Technology AG.

Its challenge is to remain one of the best suppliers of vacuum technology in the world, enjoy the highest possible levels of customer satisfaction and operate independently with a large shareholder base.

Conversely, Pfeiffer had concerns that its non-resident shareholders' participation at its general meetings was continually falling year-on-year. Pfeiffer is dedicated to upholding the highest levels of corporate governance and recognises that shareholder participation at its corporate events is the best medium by which its shareholders can influence the company's actions. Therefore it looked for ways in which to reach its shareholders outside of Germany.
