CASE STUDY: COSTS FEE SPLITS AND PAYMENTS TO (AND FROM) AFFILIATES

The challenge
An advisor with a substantial securities lending practice reported that the revenues and fees paid to an affiliated lending agent were in line with industry norms. Charged with reviewing these figures and ratifying these agreements, the board struggled. The number and variety of different securities lending agreements at the firm and across the industry made it difficult to identify and make appropriate comparisons—so the board asked Broadridge to establish a watch list of affected funds and associated standards.

The solution
Broadridge deployed its unique database to determine how best to evaluate the advisor’s practice. This uncovered insight into the costs and benefits of securities lending through affiliated and unaffiliated agents. It also enabled the board to measure the value of securities lending for individual funds, and to understand the fallout benefits for the advisor and the funds’ shareholders. By coupling data insights and subject-matter expertise, Broadridge helped the board to evaluate the advisor’s securities lending on a case-by-case basis and across the firm overall.

The outcome
The board now uses Broadridge Securities Lending as a regular part of its oversight. This helps them to understand the advisor’s practices, incorporate new data from other firms into their benchmarking and assessments, and address potential regulatory challenges. Broadridge Securities Lending has become a critical part of the board’s annual review of the advisor’s securities lending agreements. It also serves as a template for considering potential changes or additions to those agreements, helping the board to weigh the value of different alternatives.
