Survey Captures the Experiences Your Customers Really Want

Broadridge study of more than 3,000 North American consumers reveals key insights into CX and communications.

Consumers are increasingly willing to walk away from companies that provide subpar CX.

25% of consumers have stopped doing business with a company just because that business did a poor job of personalizing the experience.

35% of Millennials are especially sensitive to this: 35 percent say they're prepared to walk away.

One of the key places that consumers interact with companies is through bills and statements.

6 Average number of bills received

19% Receive 10 or more each month

Better communications can impact the bottom line in more ways than one.

20% have purchased a new product or service after seeing a message in a bill or statement

68% want providers that make it easy for them to interact across print, digital and other channels

Improving the customer experience comes down to what you send and how you send it.

Consumers are expecting more from the communications you send.

50% of consumers prefer to view bills and statements in one location. This is true for 50% of millennials.

Consumers are letting go of paper and going digital...

62% converted at least one bill or statement to paperless within the last year

12% converted five or more communications to digital

...but more than one-third of consumers will still want print five years from now.

The path to better CX is paved with more profitable, engaging interactions and communications.

Successful organizations will find ways to bring greater clarity, personalization and innovation to bills and statements, creating the experiences their customers crave.
